Smalltown Community Theatre

has been a very significant year for Smalltown Community Theatre.

The 85th anniversary season has included 48 free performances featuring a wide variety of talent. Everything from the Imperial Russian Ballet to the musical stylings of Jimmy Buffet has graced the Smalltown Stage this year, with an array of attractions in between including the The Metropolitan Opera, the Lerner and Lowe Musicals Society, the Willie Nelson Band and a never to be forgotten, posthumous performance by the one and only Elvis Presley (apparently the King has not quite left the building). The variety and scope is nothing new for Smalltown Community Theatre, it was created with cultural excellence in mind.

Many performing arts organizations have longstanding ties to the 85-year-old proscenium stage. The Boston Pops Symphony performed at the theatre for the first time in 1940. The Summer Symphony series has been held annually since 1943. The New York City Ballet has been pleasing Smalltown Community Theatre audiences since 1971, the annual Shakespeare Festival began in 1974 and the Grand Ole Opry celebrated its 21st season at Smalltown this year. On any given weekend, you will find blues, classical, festivals or jazz performances on the Smalltown stage.
